

Notes on Contributors

Monika Černá has been an English language teacher educator in the Department of English and American Studies, University of Pardubice, Czech Republic for more than two decades. Her research interests include English language teacher education and second language acquisition.

e-mail: monika.cerna@upce.cz

Jaroslava Ivanová has been a university teacher since 1993. Currently, she is working at the Department of English and American Studies, University of Pardubice, Czech Republic. She is interested in the acquisition of English pronunciation, assessment, and testing.

e-mail: jaroslava.ivanova@upce.cz

Harumi Kimura, EdD, teaches at Miyagi Gakuin Women's University, Sendai, Japan. She earned her doctorate from Temple University. She studied L2 listening anxiety in her doctoral study, and her academic interests include second language learner psychology, multilingualism, positive psychology, and cooperative learning. She co-authored a book with Dr. G. M. Jacobs, Cooperative learning and teaching, in English Language Teacher Development Series (2013, Alexandria, VA: TESOL).

e-mail: kharumi@mgu.ac.jp

Edyta Olejarczuk obtained her PhD in linguistics from the Faculty of English of Adam Mickiewicz University, Poznań, Poland. She is a lecturer and Head of the English Section in the Center of Languages and Communication of Poznań University of Technology (Poznań, Poland). Her interests include individual learner differences, new technologies in FL learning and teaching, and soft skills training. She has published several articles in edited volumes and journals. She is Assistant to the Editor of the journal Studies in Second Language Learning and Teaching.

e-mail: edytaolejarczuk@gmail.com

María Matilde Olivero works in the field of second language teacher education as an instructor and as a researcher at the National University of Río Cuarto, Argentina. Her main research interests include teacher development and individual differences in second language learning. Currently, her research explores pre-service teachers' beliefs and emotions about teaching English as a foreign language. At present, she is a doctoral candidate working on her dissertation in the Second Language Acquisition and Instructional Technology program of the University of South Florida.

e-mail: mariaolivero@mail.usf.edu

Tomasz Róg, PhD, specializes in applied linguistics and methodology of language teaching. He is a senior lecturer at the Department of Philology at S. Staszic University of Applied Sciences in Piła, Poland, and an author of articles devoted to foreign language pedagogy published in Poland and abroad and a book on the development of intercultural communicative competence among students participating in the Erasmus program. He has conducted many workshops for both pre- and in-service language teachers, and is an active member of the Modern Language Association of Poland.

e-mail: tomaszrog@yahoo.co.uk

Małgorzata Szulc-Kurpaska, PhD, is a teacher trainer at the Foreign Language Teacher Training College in Wrocław, Poland. She is the co-author of programs for teaching English in primary school and kindergarten, the coursebook Sparks, as well as the methodology textbook Teaching English to young learners. She took part in the project aimed at designing the core curriculum for foreign languages in schools and she has cooperated with the Educational Research Institute in Warsaw in conducting research into the conditions of foreign language instruction and its effectiveness in primary school.

e-mail: mszulckurpaska@gmail.com

Olga Trendak, PhD, works at the Institute of English Studies, University of Łódź, Poland. Her academic interests include, among others, language learning strategies and their role in the process of foreign language learning, teacher development, teacher training, second language acquisition, learner autonomy and form-focused instruction.

e-mail: trendak@interia.pl